Introduction

Purpose

The Minister of Broadcasting, Communications and Digital Media has appointed a panel to investigate the establishment of a Public Media Funding Commission.

To support the panel, the Ministry for Culture and Heritage (MCH) has asked PwC to assist it with researching the approaches taken by other countries in regulating and financing public media.

Our approach

MCH has selected six countries for comparison: Norway, Finland, Denmark, Ireland, Canada and Australia. We have undertaken desktop research to address four sets of questions for each country:

- Who are the public broadcasters in each country?
- How are they funded and how is funding set?
- What regulations and policies are in place to support the goals of public broadcasting?
- What information is available on viewership?

The scope of this work included research, but specifically excluded analysis or recommendations.

Sources are listed in the Appendices.

1. Executive summary

Executive summary

Common features among countries

All of the comparator countries exhibited the following features and policies.

An advertisement-free TV channel – All of the comparator countries had at least one television channel that was prohibited from advertising.

Restrictions on advertising on commercial broadcasters – All comparator countries had some limits on the amount of advertising that can be broadcast.

Nationally important events air on free-to-air channels – All of the comparator countries had policies that allowed and required nationally significant events to be broadcast on free-to-air television.

Requirements to show local content – All countries had set thresholds of the amount of locally produced content that had to be shown. Local content must be shown that reflects the diversity of each country including minority communities and indigenous languages.

Financial support for local production – All comparator countries had one or more funds to support the production of local content.

Funding through a licence or general taxation – All countries funded their public broadcasters primarily through a licence or general taxation.

Provision or regulation

Countries generally support their public broadcasting goals with a mix of provision through a government funded broadcaster and regulation by imposing rules on private broadcasters.

Australia, Ireland and the Nordics focus on funding public broadcasting

The three Nordic countries regulate less heavily and focus on strong public provision of public broadcasting. They do not allow their primary public broadcaster to collect commercial revenue, although Denmark allows its second public broadcaster to do so. Their public broadcasters are in general completely funded through either a licence fee or from general tax revenues. The Irish and Nordic broadcasters are captured by EU regulations so generally have fewer country-specific regulations. Australia regulates to a lesser extent and similarly focuses on funding its public broadcasters to meet public service goals.

Canada regulates heavily

Canada by contrast regulates private broadcasters strongly to ensure local content and local representation is seen in its media. It regulates both for content and for transmission method. Canada's primary concern is that US broadcasts do not culturally dominate Canada.

2. EU broadcasting context

EU context for broadcasters and media providers

Ireland, Denmark, Finland and Norway, as Member States of the EU or European Economic Area, are obliged to follow the EU's media policies.

Ireland, Denmark and Finland are Member States of the European Union (EU), while Norway is a member of the European Economic Area (the EEA) and must abide by EU regulations.

The EU considers audiovisual media services, such as television, to be of significant cultural importance. It has set out various regulations that all Member States must adhere to and that Member States should base their own legislation on.

The main goals of the EU policies are to:

- ensure all countries' media providers are operating in similar conditions
- maintain media pluralism
- protect the interests of consumers, especially children
- promote cultural diversity
- ensure each nation's regulators stay independent.

The EU seeks to maintain a single integrated market for all products and services, including television and other media services. In order to achieve this, there is a Digital Single Market strategy in place to ensure that all those within the EU and EEA have access to the same market of digital goods and services.

To help ensure that all countries are operating on a level playing field, the Audiovisual Media Services Directive lays out regulations that commercial and private broadcasters must abide by. The directive stipulates restrictions on the type and quantity of advertising allowed to be screened, the accessibility of nationally important events, and the promotion of European content.

The EU has funding and support programmes available to help with promotion of European content. This is part of the EU's larger commitment to cultural diversity.

The EU recognises the role of public broadcasting in fulfilling the democratic, social and cultural needs of a country.

Public broadcasters provide services that are usually not met by the commercial market and are, therefore, exempt from many of the EU's policies as long as:

- funding is used for public service reasons
- private sector broadcasters are not unfairly disadvantaged.

European audiovisual regulatory policy states that broadcasters must protect public interests, including:

- cultural diversity
- the right to information
- media pluralism
- the protection of minors
- consumer protection
- enhancing public awareness and media literacy.

EU context for broadcasters and media providers

EU policies set out minimum standards to be followed

Television without frontiers

The EU's Digital Single Market Strategy is a long-term strategy that puts forward a number of initiatives to create an integrated market for digital content and services. The desired outcome of this strategy is to ensure that consumers across the EU have online access to the same TV and radio programmes. Currently, legislation is in place that ensures copyright only needs to be cleared in one country to be available throughout the EU. This allows for broadcasters to offer their TV and radio programmes throughout the EU.

The Audiovisual Media Services Directive requires that Member States prevent any acts that limit the single market for television or that limit media pluralism.

The EU has a stated policy of preventing any firm from dominating the media market and promoting media pluralism. Member States can achieve this through the allocation of broadcasting licences and oversight of industry competition regulations.

Accessibility

The EU Audiovisual Media Services Directive states that accessible audiovisual media services are part of disabled and elderly peoples rights to be integrated into social and cultural life. The ways in which audiovisual media can achieve accessibility should include sign language, subtitles, audio-description and easily understandable menu navigation.

Promoting European works

The Audiovisual Media Services Directive aims to promote the production and distribution of European content.

The directive states that broadcasters must dedicate at least half of their broadcasting time to European works.

In addition, broadcasters must reserve at least ten per cent of their transmission time for independently produced European work. That is, content that is created by a person or company independent of the broadcaster. It is important that a sufficient proportion of this content is broadcast within five years of production.

The EU Parliament has very recently indicated it has reached agreement with other European law-making bodies to include online streaming services into this regime. Online streaming services in the EU (including Netflix and Amazon) will need to dedicate 30 per cent of their output to European content, bringing them in line with traditional TV networks. Online streaming must also comply with other regulations including advertising limits and banning product placement in children's shows. The law is expected to be passed in September.

The Creative Europe initiative is dedicated to strengthening Europe's cultural and media sectors. Creative Europe's total budget is EUR 1.5 billion in 2018 to support artists, films books and television. This programme includes specific support for the independent production of European TV programmes.

Restrictions on advertising

Television advertising may not make up more than 20 per cent of broadcasting time in any given hour, including during prime time.

In addition to the time limits, there are restrictions on what can be advertised. Advertising of tobacco products and prescription medications are prohibited.

There are further restrictions on advertising during children's programming. For example, advertising for foods that are high in fat or sugar are prohibited.

Events of national significance

Broadcasting rights for events of national significance must allow for the coverage to be accessible for free by the majority of the public. The Audiovisual Media Services Directive lists the Olympic Games, football World Cup and European football championship as examples of events of national importance.

Each country may set their own list of nationally important events that must be available for the public to watch.

3. Comparator countries' media models

Norway

Broadcasters and funding

Population 5.3 million

Public broadcasters in Norway

The Norwegian Broadcasting Company (NRK) is Norway's public broadcaster.

NRK is the Norway's largest media provider, and has a special mandate to be a non-commercial, politically independent public broadcaster. It is a limited company that is 100 per cent owned by the Norwegian government.

NRK offers its public broadcasting services through television, radio and online, with:

- three TV channels
- 14 radio stations
- a website offering streaming and on-demand content.

NRK's total budget is NOK 5 billion (NZD$882m)

Private broadcasters

There are at least 13 private companies operating TV networks in Norway. The largest include Viasat with 18 channels and TV4 Group with 17 channels. There are also a number of international networks that air in Norway.

There are two main private radio networks in Norway – P4 and Radio Norge. These networks operate across the country, with a number of regional and local radio channels that only cover certain areas. For example, the capital Oslo has 17 local radio channels.

In addition, there is also an internet-only radio station that operates throughout Norway.

The private broadcasters all receive commercial revenue through advertising, sponsorships and subscriptions.

Funding model in Norway

The funding model for NRK is entirely publicly funded.

NRK is funded through a licence fee. This licence fee must be paid by all households in Norway that own a television. In 2018, the licence fee is NOK 2,970 (NZD$524) per year. There are approximately 2 million licence fee payers in Norway who contribute about 97 per cent of NRK's total budget.

NRK does not generate commercial revenue. It is guided by public service objectives and does not provide commercial services at all. It is laid out in law that NRK must not be financed through commercial revenue. Norway's Broadcasting Act of 1992 states that NRK cannot be financed through advertising on its public service channels.

The licence fees are set by Norway's supreme legislature.

Norway

Regulation and policy tools

Population 5.3 million

EU regulations

Although Norway is not a member state of the EU, it is in the EEA and follows EU regulations.

In accordance with the EU's Audiovisual Media Services Directive, Norway's broadcasting legislation provides further guidance on some EU regulations.

While the EU lays out that advertising may not exceed 20 per cent of transmission time in any given hour – Norway's Broadcasting Act restricts that further to 15 per cent. It also stipulates that advertisements may not be broadcast in connection with children's programmes or be directed at children. These advertising restrictions are stricter than the EU-wide regulations.

Content provision

Norway does not appear to have regulations on content provided above the EU regulation that at least 50 per cent of content is of European origin and 10 per cent is independently produced.

Regulations for private broadcasters

Under the Broadcasting Act of 1992, any company other than NRK must have a licence to pursue broadcasting activities.

Broadcasting licences are issued by the Ministry of Culture. The Ministry may attach conditions to the licence that must be adhered to by the broadcaster.

Broadcasting licences typically include the condition that any company that engages in nation-wide broadcasting that is financed through advertising must pay a fee in order to do so.

Policies on production

Norway has a tax rebate scheme available to local media producers. Producers can claim a 25 per cent tax rebate on the production costs occurred in Norway in the production of TV series.

In addition, the Norwegian Media Authority administers a range of subsidy schemes for broadcasters and media providers. Some of these include grants available for local broadcasters.

Norway

Content

Population 5.3 million

Public broadcasters' content

Norway has a dedicated channel for children's content, a dedicated channel for Sami language content, and specific programming for ethnic minorities.

Programmes for ethnic minorities

NRK has specific content for some of Norway's ethnic minorities, including Roma, Romani, and Forest Finns.

Programmes in indigenous languages

On its national broadcast NRK has news bulletins presented in Sami languages.

In addition to this, one of NRK's regional broadcasting services is available nation wide and provides services in Sami language.

Children's programming

NRK has a channel called 'Super' that is dedicated to children's programming. Throughout the day there are programmes on this channel aimed at children of various ages.

Prime time current affairs programming

In NRK's television schedule there is extensive current affairs programming, including during prime time hours.

On weekdays there are a number of short five- to ten-minute news segments on NRK1 during prime time hours. On weekends, there is a 45-minute long news programme at 7pm followed by other shorter news segments.

This includes local news bulletins for various districts throughout Norway, and news bulletins presented in Sami.

An example of NRK's television schedule can be found in Appendix 1.

Viewership

We were unable to find viewership figures for NRK, however a 2016 report stated that the main channel, NRK1, is watched by over half the population every day.

Finland

Broadcasters and funding

Population: 5.5 million

Public broadcasters in Finland

Finland's public broadcaster is Yle, otherwise known as Yleisradio or the Finnish Broadcasting Company.

Yle is a public company, owned entirely by the Finnish government. Its services are available to all residents of Finland.

Yle offers content through television, radio and online, with:

- four TV channels
- six national radio channels and 24 regional radio stations
- Finland's biggest selection of online radio and television platforms.

In 2016, Yle's budget was EUR 471 million (NZD$800m).

Private broadcasters

Nationwide, Finland has 12 private free-to-air channels and more than 23 paid channels. Additionally, there are more than 30 free to air local channels.

There are three main private television companies in Finland, all of which offer online services.

There are 30 private radio companies with licences in Finland, as well as a number of regional stations. The average Finn has access to 20 different radio stations, with larger cities having more local stations available.

Private television and radio companies in Finland are financed through a combination of advertising, sponsorship and subscription fees.

Funding model in Finland

The public broadcasting funding model in Finland is entirely publicly funded.

Yle is funded by a tax. The tax was implemented in 2013, replacing a licence fee. The tax is paid by both individuals and companies. For individuals, the tax is 0.68 per cent of their income, up to a maximum of EUR 140 per year. Companies contribute 0.35 per cent of revenue.

The tax is kept separate from general taxation and the annual state budget, although VAT of 10 per cent is deducted.

In 2016, taxpayers contributed a total of EUR 508 million.

Yle does not generate commercial revenue. Finland's legislation concerning the funding of public service broadcasting guarantees full government funding for Yle. It also states that Yle is prohibited from advertising or having sponsors.

Yle's funding level is subject to frequent review. The Finnish government has a parliamentary working group on Yle, which reviews funding levels. Each year, the working group assesses whether to apply an index increase to the funding. This review covers a rolling period looking forward three years.

Finland

Regulation and policy tools

Population: 5.5 million

EU regulations

Broadcasters in Finland are subject to the regulations laid out by the EU. As with Norway, some of Finland's regulations are stricter than those laid out by the EU.

For example, programmes from independent producers must comprise at least 15 per cent of a broadcaster's transmission time (the EU minimum standard is 10 per cent).

Nationally significant events

Finland has not specified a list of events that it deems to be of national significance. Whether or not an event should be available free to air is up to Yle. Yle has a policy to share these rights with commercial broadcasters, but maintains the rights to some events that it considers nationally important. For example, Yle has the rights to all winter sports until 2021. In addition, Yle ensured it retained the rights to the 2016 Rio Olympics and the UEFA European Championship.

Content provision

Finland does not appear to have regulations on content provided above the EU regulation that at least 50 per cent of content is of European origin. However it has more stringent rules on the quantity of independently produced content.

Regulations for private broadcasters

Private broadcasters need a licence to operate in Finland.

Commercial companies must apply for a licence to broadcast radio and television. Generally, licence applications are granted unless the government has reason to suspect that the company is violating any provisions set out in the Broadcasting Act 1998.

The application fee for the broadcasting licence is EUR 1,000 (NZD$1700). Licences are granted for a maximum period of 10 years, upon which they can be renewed or re-applied for.

When considering licence applications, the government must consider how the broadcaster will promote freedom of speech and how it will meet the needs of the diverse public. In granting a broadcasting licence, the government may attach conditions on the area the broadcaster may serve, the time and day the broadcaster can operate on and the technology it is allowed to use.

Policies on production

Yle is required to commission content from outside producers.

In 2016, the parliamentary working group submitted a proposal obligating Yle to increase content purchases from external sources from 30 to 35 per cent by 2022 (the EU requirement is a minimum of 10 per cent).

Like Norway, Finland also has a 25 per cent tax rebate available to television producers on the production costs incurred locally.

Finland

Content

Population: 5.5 million

Content

Yle does not have dedicated channels for particular audiences, but does make programming available for minority groups, children and in indigenous languages.

Programmes for ethnic minorities

Yle has a focus on diversity and providing content for minority groups in Finland. Yle screens news in 11 languages.

Programmes in indigenous languages

The Yle channel Teema and Fem shows Sami language programmes.

Children's programming

Yle's television schedule shows at least one channel that dedicates morning and afternoon programming to children's shows.

Prime time current affairs programming

Yle's TV1 channel shows news and current affairs programming during prime time hours. Yle also presents the news in sign language.

News programming on Yle is broken down into a 22-minute long general news bulletin, followed by eight minutes of local news. After this, there is a current affairs programme.

An example of Yle's television schedule can be found in Appendix 2.

Viewership

Yle's television reaches an audience of over three million viewers each day. Finland's total population was 5.5 million people in 2016.

The following viewership figures were found for the week to Sunday 15 April 2018 and relate to current affairs programmes.

- The top five most viewed television programmes in Finland across the week are all either news or sports news programmes.
- With the exception of two reality shows and two movies, all of the top 50 programmes are related to news, weather and sports.
- Over 982,000 Finns watched the most viewed programme, Yle News on Sunday evening.

The following viewership figures were found for the month of March 2018 and relate to children's programming.

- The children's show with the highest audience had 85,000 viewers. This is roughly 13 per cent of children aged between four and 14 years old.
- All of the top 20 children's programmes for the month aired on Saturday or Sunday, except for one which aired on Friday evening.

Denmark

Broadcasters and funding

Population: 5.6 million

Public broadcasters in Denmark

Denmark has two public broadcasting companies:

- The Danish Broadcasting Corporation (DR)
- TV2

DR is the national public broadcaster, while TV2 operates public regional stations. DR offers a range of content, including:

- six TV channels
- eight radio channels
- a website with on-demand and streaming services.

TV2 mainly shows news and current affairs programmes with a regional affiliation. TV2 has six national TV channels and eight regional channels.

In 2016, DR received over DKK 4.1 billion in funding (NZD$935m).

Private broadcasters

In Denmark, the largest private broadcasting company is Modern Times Group, which operates over 15 channels across its brands.

Private broadcasters do not provide any free-to-air TV services in Denmark.

There are six privately owned national radio networks in Denmark, with a large number of local and regional stations.

Funding model in Denmark

The public broadcasting funding in Denmark is entirely publicly funded.

DR is funded by a licence fee. The licence fee is charged to all households in Denmark with television sets, computers, smartphones or other devices that have internet access.

The licence fee is DKK 2,527 (NZD$576) per household per year, and represents over 90 per cent of DR's total funding. The licence fee is due to be phased out over a five year period starting in 2019. It will likely be replaced with general public funding, but details have not been made clear.

DR does not generate commercial revenue. Denmark's Radio and Television Broadcasting Act states that DR is to be financed through its share of licence fees and income from the sale of its programmes. DR is not allowed to receive advertising revenue from either its television programming or online services. DR also is not allowed to require its users to pay for its public services, either through subscription or other kind of fee.

TV2 is financed through both public funding and commercial revenue. TV2 is funded through subscription fees. Consumers who want to watch TV2 must purchase or rent a decoder, and pay a monthly subscription charge of DKK 12.50 (NZD$2.85). TV2's regional channels are still partly funded by the licence fee.

The funding levels for both DR and TV2 are proposed by the Board and submitted to the Minister for Culture for approval.

Denmark

Regulation and policy tools

Population: 5.6 million

EU regulations

As with both Finland and Norway, Denmark is subject to the EU's regulations on broadcasting.

One area in which Denmark's regulations differ from the EU-wide directive is in advertising. While the EU regulations stipulate 20 per cent of transmission time as the maximum for advertising, Denmark limits this further to 15 per cent. In addition, advertisements may only be shown in blocks between programmes, or during natural breaks in sports (eg half-time).

Nationally significant events

Denmark does not define events of national importance that should be broadcast to the public on free to air television. They, therefore, have no additional regulations beyond the EU-wide legislation on this. As DR is the only free to air network, it is ultimately up to its discretion as to what events are considered nationally significant and are broadcast free to air.

Content provision

Denmark does not appear to have regulations on content provided above the EU regulation that at least 50 per cent of content is of European origin. However it has more stringent rules on the quantity of independently produced content.

Regulations for private broadcasters

Private broadcasters need permission from the Radio and Television Board to operate in Denmark. The Radio and Television Broadcasting Act 2003 states that the right to broadcast can be obtained through:

- a licence granted by the Radio and Television Board
- registering with the Radio and Television Board.

In addition to granting licences, the Radio and Television Board is responsible for overseeing the advertising and sponsorship of commercial broadcasters.

Policies on production

TV2 is required to commission content from outside producers.

Other than its news programmes, TV2 is not allowed to produce its own content and must purchase it from outside producers.

The Radio and Television Board administers a pool of funding from which grants can be given to local radio and television producers. The Copenhagen Film Fund also offers funding for the production of film and television in Copenhagen and the rest of Denmark. In 2017, the Copenhagen Film Fund was granted EUR 2.1 million (NZD$3.6m) to invest in Danish and international film and TV production.

Denmark

Content

Population: 5.6 million

Content

DR focuses on news, sports and current events with less focus on ethnic minorities or children's programming.

Programmes for ethnic minorities

There is no evidence of programming specifically targeted at ethnic minorities on DR's television schedule.

Children's programming

None of DR's channels appear to have specific programmes for children on its television schedules. DR's online offering includes specific content for children, which parents can lock so that children are unable to access other content.

Prime time current affairs programming

The TV schedule for DR shows that the channel DR1 primarily screens news, weather, sport and current affairs shows during prime time hours.

An example of DR's television schedule can be found in Appendix 3.

Viewership

We were unable to find viewership figures for Denmark.

Ireland

Public broadcasters and funding

Population: 5.0 million

Public broadcasters in Ireland

Ireland has two public broadcasting companies, Raidió Teilifís Éireann (RTE), and TG4.

RTE is considered the main national public broadcaster, while TG4 is a public broadcaster for Irish language speakers.

RTE offers broadcasting services through television, radio and online channels, including:

- seven TV channels
- four radio channels in addition to five digital only stations
- the online RTE players with on-demand services.

TG4 has one channel and is also available online.

Private broadcasters

In addition to RTE and TG4, two private broadcasters operate free online services throughout Ireland.

There are three companies that provide paid television services, all with content available online.

There are three private national radio networks in Ireland, as well as a number of regional ones.

Funding model in Ireland

Public broadcasting in Ireland is partly publicly funded and partly funded by commercial revenue.

RTE and TG4 receive funding through a licence fee. All households or businesses with a television set must pay the licence fee. Currently, the licence fee is EUR 160 per year (NZD$271).

In addition to the licence fee, TG4 receives funding from the government. In 2016, TG4 received EUR 26 million (NZD$44.2m) from government funding and EUR 9 million (NZD$15.3m) from the licence fee.

RTE engages in commercial activity to cover the shortfall in public funding. RTE does not receive enough funding from the licence fee to cover its costs, so engages in commercial activities to bridge the gap. The commercial activity is primarily advertising, on both television and radio channels.

In 2016, RTE received EUR 179 million (NZD$304m) from the licence fee and EUR 158 million in commercial revenue (NZD$268m).

Reviews of funding levels are carried out annually. The Broadcasting Authority conducts an annual review to examine whether RTE and TG4 have met their commitments and receive adequate funding. Every five years, a more thorough review is carried out which includes strategic plans, the availability of commercial funding and international developments in public broadcast funding.

Ireland

Regulation and policy tools

Population: 5.0 million

EU regulations

Ireland also imposes stricter regulations on the amount of advertising allowed to be screened by broadcasters. Advertising must not exceed 15 per cent of total daily broadcasting time, and not more than 10 minutes in any hour.

Nationally significant events

Ireland has designated a list of events of major importance, which are reviewed every three years. The list includes:

- the Summer Olympics
- the All-Ireland Senior Inter-County Football and Hurling Finals
- Ireland's home and away qualifying games in the European Football Championship and the FIFA World Cup tournaments
- Ireland's games in the European Football Championship Finals tournament and the FIFA World Cup tournament
- the opening games, the semi-finals and final of the European Football Championship Finals and the FIFA World Cup tournaments
- Ireland's games in the Rugby World Cup tournament
- the Irish Grand National and the Irish Derby
- the Nations Cup at the Dublin Horse Show.

The above events must be available live on free to air television, while Ireland's games in the Six Nations Rugby tournament must be available but can be deferred coverage.

Content provision

Ireland does not appear to have regulations on content provided above the EU regulation that at least 50 per cent of content is of European origin and 10 per cent is independently produced.

Regulations for private broadcasters

Private broadcasters must obtain a licence from the Broadcasting Authority

When considering licence applications, the Authority takes into account the following:

- the character and experience of the applicant
- the applicant's financial resources
- the quality and range of proposed content
- any Irish language content
- the creation of new opportunities for promoting Irish talent and culture.

Policies on production

In addition to granting licences, the Broadcasting Authority administers public funding for Irish content production. The Broadcasting Authority operates the Broadcasting Fund.

In 2016, there was EUR 14 million in grants available to support local projects and producers in the media sector. These grants are funded by the licence fee.

Ireland

Content

Population: 5.0 million

Content

Irish public broadcasters have dedicated channels for the Irish language and for children's programmes. They do not provide programming for ethnic minorities.

Programmes for ethnic minorities

There is no evidence of programmes targeted specifically at ethnic minorities.

Programmes in indigenous languages

TG4 is aimed at Irish language speakers, and the majority of its content is in Irish language.

Children's programming

RTE has a dedicated channel for children's programmes, RTEjr.

Prime time current affairs programming

Both of RTE's main channels screen news and current affairs programmes in prime time hours. RTE2 shows a half hour news programme at 6pm, while RTE One shows a two-hour long current affairs show on weekday evenings.

An example of RTE's television schedule can be found in Appendix 4.

Viewership

Full viewership numbers for RTE are not available.

Two of the top five most watched programmes on RTE in March were prime time news shows.

The top 20 most watched shows in Ireland in all of 2017 all aired on either RTE1 or RTE2. In addition, 11 of the top 20 were sport programming.

Canada

Broadcasters and funding

Population 35.6 million

Public broadcasters in Canada

Canada's public broadcaster is the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation (the CBC). Its French broadcasting arm is known as the Société Radio-Canada (SRC).

The CBC is a government agency that provides content to all residents of Canada. The CBC has:

- 2 main national TV channels, 1 in English and 1 in French
- 5 national specialty TV channels, 2 in English and 3 in French
- 27 regional TV stations, 14 in English and 13 in French
- 4 national radio stations, 2 in English and 2 in French
- 88 regional/local radio stations.

In 2016/17, CBC's revenue was CA$1,650 million (NZD$1,790m).

Private broadcasters

There are three main private broadcasters who broadcast nationally in Canada:

CTV - (owned by Bell Media) owns 30 local TV stations, 30 specialty channels and 109 licenced radio stations across Canada. Customers are able to watch live TV online or episodes on demand.

Global - (owned by Corus entertainment, Shaw Communications) owns 15 TV stations, 44 specialty channels and 39 radio stations. Customers are able to watch live TV online or episodes on demand

TVA - (French language) available nationally on cable and satellite, only partial terrestrially. It appears that customers can watch some content online.

Funding model in Canada

The public broadcasting funding model in Canada is part government funding with some commercial revenue.

CBC receives 2/3 funding from government. In 2016/17 CBC received CA$1,099.1 million (NZ$1,189m) in funding from in appropriations from the government, which accounted for 66 per cent of its revenue.

CBC allows advertising. CBC was also able to generate commercial revenue:

- CA$300.6 million (NZ$325m) from advertising
- CA$131.2 million in subscriber fees (NZ$142m)
- CA$125.1 million financing and other income (NZ$135m).

CBC's television stations carry advertising while the radio stations are prohibited from advertising.

Funding is set through the budget process

CBC's funding is set through the regular annual budget process.

In November 2016, CBC proposed to the Government that its funding should be removed from election/budgetary cycles. Instead it proposes it be funded in 5 year cycles in line with the length of broadcast licences, and be indexed to inflation. CBC sees this as a way of achieving a more "predictable and stable" funding platform. However, the Government has not appeared to respond to this suggestion and it has not been taken up to date.

Regulations

Private broadcasters must support local content production

For private broadcasters, each service within each organisation must:

- allocate 30 per cent of its revenue to original Canadian programming expenditure (CPE)
- allocate 5 per cent of its revenues to expenditure on programmes of national interest (PNI), 75 per cent of which must finance independently produced programmes. Most of these revenues go to the Canadian Media Fund which funds and promotes the production of Canadian media
- allocate 11 per cent of previous year's revenue to expenditure on local news production
- broadcast local content weekly for a minimum of 7 hours for non-metropolitan markets and 14 hours for metropolitan markets of which 3 hours and 6 hours, respectively, are local news and information
- contribute 1 per cent of gross revenues to one or more licensed independent production funds.

Broadcasters get extra credit towards these requirements by supporting indigenous and minority language content:

- indigenous produced content expenditure counts for 50 per cent extra against the broadcaster's CPE requirement
- expenditure on content produced by official language minority communities counts for 25 per cent extra towards the CPE requirement.

At least half shown content must be Canadian in nature

Private broadcasters through any medium "must offer more Canadian than non-Canadian content".

Ministry for Culture and Heritage
PwC

Population: 35.6 million

The CBC is required to reflect the diversity of Canada's populations. It is required to include the following:

- Content that represents "all regions of Canada, including official minority communities", including during prime time periods. This includes French language content in English language majority areas, and vice versa.
- Across the whole broadcast day, 75 per cent must be Canadian content, and a minimum of 80 per cent during prime time.
- Children's content must be at least 15 hours per week (75 per cent independent production).

In addition, there are set minimum requirements for programmes of national interest:

- 9 hours per week on English language channels, of which 75 per cent must be independently produced
- 7 hours per week on French language channels, of which 60 per cent must be independently produced.

Policy tools

Canada blocks US programmes if they will sap Canadian advertisers

Many US TV broadcasts will reach Canadian audiences. Canadian policy is geared to prevent domination by channels from these US border stations. US cable channels are blocked from showing in Canada. There are tax incentives to encourage business to advertise on Canadian stations rather than US border stations. In addition, there is a strategy of 'simultaneous substitution', where if a US border station and a Canadian station are broadcasting the same programme at the same time, the Canadian signal will block the US border station. This is to further encourage Canadian advertisers to rely on Canadian broadcasters.

Canada restricts ownership of media and owning all three media types (TV, radio and newspaper) in a single market is prohibited. There are also restrictions on the number of radio stations that may be owned by one entity.

Private Canadian broadcasters are required to carry dedicated channels for ethnic minorities, and indigenous and minority languages. The CBC has a dedicated children's channel.

In addition to the CBC's channels, Canada supports minority programming by mandating a list of required channels that private broadcasters must provide to their customers. These channels are listed in the table to the right.

Programmes for ethnic minorities

The Broadcasting Act 1991 requires CBC to provide an international service, which is available online in English, French, Spanish, Arabic and Mandarin languages. As part of CBC's ongoing strategy to deliver on its mandate, there is a continued focus on producing more Canadian content, including that of French language and minority communities programming.

Programmes in indigenous languages

The Aboriginal Peoples Television Network is a mandatory station for all private broadcasters. CBC's Annual Report 2016/17 states that it has indigenous languages in all forms of its programming, "Operating in both official languages and eight Indigenous languages, with radio, television and digital platforms, CBC/Radio-Canada services are extensive and available to Canadians wherever, however and whenever they want."

Children's programming

CBC has a dedicated channel for children

Prime time current affairs programming

CBC has a dedicated news channels in both English and French. CBC carries current affairs programming more than once weekly ('The National'), during primetime, on its main CBC TV channel. A sample of programming for CBC channels, from various regions and online content, can be found in Appendix 5.

Viewership/ratings

Publicly available national ratings numbers appear to be very scarce. The CRTC published a high-level ratings share of broadcasters for 2015/16, showing that CBC had an overall share of the English language services excluding Quebec, of 5.1 per cent and French language of 0.1 per cent.

Of the Quebec market, CBC had a 12.9 per cent share of French language services and 0.5 per cent of English language services.

The CBC published its own viewership share for the same period, at a lower level analysis, but only for categories of its choosing.

Channel	Indicator	Language market	Viewer share
CBC Radio 1 & 2	All day audience share	English	18.5%
CBC Television	Prime-time audience share	English	5.8%
CBC News Network	All day audience share	English	1.7%

Broadcasters and funding

Public broadcasters in Australia

Australia has two main public broadcasters:

- The Australian Broadcasting Corporation (ABC)
- The Special Broadcasting Service (SBS).

ABC's annual budget for 2016/17 is AUD$1.1 billion per year. (NZSD$1.2b) The ABC is the primary public broadcaster. It has six free-to-air television channels, fourteen national radio stations and fifty regional radio stations. It also streams its channels online on its streaming site 'iView'.

SBS's annual budget for 2016/17 is AUD$396 million per year. (NZD$423m) SBS is a multicultural and multilingual public broadcaster. Its purpose is to reflect the multicultural nature of Australia.

The SBS has six free-to-air television channels, one subscription channel and eight radio stations. SBS also has an 'On Demand' section on its website for streaming.

Private broadcasters

There are approximately 95 registered commercial television licences. Free-to-air television broadcasters tend to focus their broadcasting either in metropolitan areas or regional areas. Some of the most significant market players are as follows:

Metropolitan free-to-air television broadcasters:

- Seven West Media: Has five television channels and a digital platform. Also broadcasts in regional Queensland.
- Network Ten Australia: Has four television channels and a digital platform.
- Nine Entertainment Co: Has five television channels and a digital platform.

Major regional free-to-air television broadcasters:

- WIN Network: Australia's largest regional commercial television network.
- Prime Media Group: Regional to eastern and western Australia.

Population: 23.2 million

Private Subscription television providers:

Subscription television in Australia is largely dominated by the provider Foxtel Australia. Foxtel has 48 television channels and provides on demand movies and television programs.

Radio and community broadcasters:

There are 273 commercial radio services that currently have a commercial radio broadcasting licence, 283 community radio broadcasters and 6 community TV broadcasters.

Funding model in Australia

The ABC is almost entirely publicly funded. ABC is prohibited by law from advertising. 91 per cent of its revenue comes from the government through general public funding. The remaining nine per cent comes from allowed commercial activities such as merchandising, and sales of DVDs, and sales of programming to other jurisdictions.

SBS is partially publicly funded. SBS is allowed to advertise, within restrictions. 71 per cent of SBS's budget is from public funding and the remainder is from advertising revenue.

The public funding level for ABC and SBS is set in the Budget and is general government funding. This funding is part of the portfolio budget for the Department of Communications and the Arts. In the 2016/17 Australian budget, the funding for the ABC and SBS was set for a three year period.

Screen Australia supports content production in Australia. Screen Australia was established with the purpose of providing funding to Australian screen development, production and promotion. It is publicly funded receiving AUD$84 million in 2016/17 (NZD$90m).

Any funding Screen Australia provides for production above $500,000 is provided as a recoupable equity investment. Returns on equity investments generated an additional AUD $6.3 million in 2016/17 (NZD$6.7m).

Advertising

The quantity and type of advertising is restricted

The main public broadcaster ABC is prohibited from advertising. SBS is allowed to advertise only up to 5 minutes in every hour of content. In addition, SBS is also only allowed to broadcast advertisements in natural programme breaks or at the start and end of a programme.

Commercial television broadcasting services face hourly limits for advertising that vary based on the time of day. Community radio broadcasters are restricted from broadcasting any advertisements. There are also restrictions placed on all broadcasters regarding the timing of certain advertisements for legally restricted products such as alcohol. All broadcasters are also restricted from advertising tobacco products and therapeutic goods unless approved by the Therapeutic Goods Administration.

Nationally significant events

Free-to-air broadcasters have first option to broadcast rights for important events

There is an anti-siphoning list which is created by the Minister of Broadcasting and includes any events that the Minister believes should be available free to the public. This scheme provides free-to-air broadcasters with the right to purchase events before subscription television broadcasters. The free-to-air broadcasters may choose whether to purchase the rights or broadcast the event.

In some cases the free-to-air television provider will purchase the rights and then enter into a deal with a subscription television provider to share the broadcasting of the event. Events are removed from the anti-siphoning list 26 weeks out from the event if a free-to-air broadcaster has not already purchased the rights to broadcast the event.

Regulations for private broadcasters

There are minimum amounts of Australian content required

For commercial free-to-air channels:

- the main channel must show at least 55 per cent Australian programming
- secondary channels must show an average of 4 hours per day of Australian content over a year. Note that New Zealand produced content is included in the definition of 'Australian content' for meeting these requirements.

For subscription television services, 10 per cent of expenditure must be on new Australian drama.

Regional commercial radio stations must play at least 4.5 hours of material of local significance during daytime hours.

Recent changes to regulations

The government has relaxed regulations that had prevented media monopolies

In 2017 the government removed regulations that had applied to the broadcasting industry including:

- The 75 per cent audience reach rule: This specified that a person could not have control over a commercial television broadcasting licence that broadcasts to more than 75 per cent of the Australian population.
- The 2 out of 3 rule: This rule specified that an entity could not control more than two media platforms (TV, radio and newspapers) in any one commercial radio licence area.

The reason given for removing the regulations was that they hindered the ability of Australian broadcasters to compete with internet content providers.

Australia

Content

ABC and SBS have dedicated channels for indigenous language programming, children's programming, and a variety of programmes reflecting ethnic minorities.

Programmes for ethnic minorities

Over half of the programs that SBS broadcasts are in languages other than English and the majority of them are made available to English speakers through subtitles. SBS radio also broadcasts in over 70 languages.

Programmes in indigenous languages

SBS provides a channel (NITV) dedicated to programs that are produced by and about Aboriginal people and Torres Strait Islanders.

Children's programming

ABC has two dedicated television channels for children ABC KIDS and ABC ME.

Prime time current affairs programming

ABC has a dedicated news channel, and broadcasts news and current affairs on its main channel each night in prime time (from 7:00pm – 8:00pm). SBS shows world news on its main channel in prime time each night and has current affairs once per week from 8:30pm-10pm.

Examples of ABC's and SBS's television schedules can be found in Appendix 6.
